

Kelly Services Reveals Redesigned Global Web Site

December 1, 2005

Sleek Enhancements Cater to Businesses, Job Seekers and Meet Online Disability Interface Standards

TROY, Mich. (December 1, 2005) - Kelly Services, a global staffing solutions company, today announced the launch of its redesigned Web site, kellyservices.com. The global site, highlighting a new attractive and interactive design, will give Web visitors direct access to Kelly's staffing and employment services available in 29 countries and territories. The Web site's global enhancements are being rolled out to all of Kelly's online properties.

"In redesigning our site, our goal was to provide a more interactive online experience, while still maintaining the key features of our award winning Web site," said David Fenech, senior director of eBusiness for Kelly Services. "Also, we're implementing new accessibility guideline principles to make our Web sites even more user-friendly for disabled visitors," said Fenech.

As the job market tightens, businesses will find it difficult to locate talent. An advantage of the enhanced global site is that staffing requests can be made directly from the home page to any of Kelly's branch office network. The site also links to smartmanager.com, a resource for HR professionals containing the latest employment news and information including current economic indicators.

According to Brent McConnell, eBusiness manager at Kelly Services, "The new look and interactivity will also provide job seekers - from college students to the mature worker - a source to easily identify career opportunities." With the new design, job opportunities can immediately be located on the Kelly Career Network™, allowing job seekers to choose from the myriad of career opportunities that Kelly has available around the globe. Candidates can apply for jobs online and setup a personal job search agent to have job postings matching their criteria sent automatically via email.
